PILOT

The premise of L ELLA is great and builds the foundation for future episodes of a fun, action-packed investigative work. We have a quirky main character in L whom we want to root for.

It has a similar feel to something like NBC's WILL TRENT. Both are wildly good at their jobs and are entertaining as we watch them outsmart everyone during their cases.

L ELLA does a great job of setting itself up as a lighthearted, fun crime mystery series. We are drawn in by this young, almost too good at her job, private investigator with a developmental disorder. Watching her break codes, hack databases, and use her own style to find the criminals sets us up for a fun, week-to-week whodunnit.

In the opening episode what is most impressive about the conversations is not only that the protagonist has an interesting tone and manner of speaking, but that all of the characters have an interesting manner of speaking.

For this reason, it is essential that the characters are not only appealing, but they must be distinctive as well so audiences can keep them all in order. I think both are very effective which adds much to the screenplay..
